Delmas Springs Sensation.

The springing of scueations aid not all rest with the district attorney. Mr. Delmas sent a genuine theil through the courtroom by declaring that he had been informed it whis the purpose of the district attorney to indict Mrs. Thuw. Mr. Jerome denied that any such statements had been made. He did not deny the purpose. This incident came about near the close of the forencen session, when Mr. Jerome, in an effort to make the defense produce certain letters from Stanford White, which Mr. Thaw had declared were in the possession of Clifford Hartridge, one of her husband's attorneys, called Mr. Hartridge to the witness stand. The lawyer declined to answer questions relating to the letters, and when it became necessary for him. Hartridge Keeps Letters.

During the afternoon when Mrs. Thaw had been recalled, she declared she was perfectly willing that the letters should be produced.

not?" asked Mr. Jerome.
"No, I gave them to Mr. Thaw."
Mr. Jerome directed his assistant. Mr. Jerome directed his assistant, Mr. Garvan, to have a subpoena issued for Mr. Hartridge. When this was done, Mr. Jerome again demanded the letters, Mr. Hartridge said he had no intention of complying, as he had received the letters from the hamis of the defendant. Mr. Jerome appealed to Justice Fitzgerald. He had neglected to have an affiguration. aid. He had neglected to have an affi-davit made as to the service of the sub-poena, and Justice Fitzgeraid said there was nothing upon which he could act, Mr. Garvan was directed by his chief to draw up the affidavit. There the mat-ter rested, however, Mr. Jerome making ne further move.

Just after the luncheon recess the district atterney wanted permission to discontinue the cross-examination of Mrs. Thaw long enough to take the testimony of Drs. Deemar, of Kittanning, Pa., and Bingamin, of Pittsburg, both of whom are to testify as to traces of lunched the branches of the defendant's family. Mr. Jerome sald he was informed the physicians were about to leave the jurisdiction of the court.

Mr. Jerome insisted that their testimony be taken, and Thaw's counsel insisted that Mrs. Thaw's cross-examination should proceed. "We will settle the matter by sitting to-morrow and Saturday," said Justice Fitzgerald.

Just before adjournment for the day, however, Mr. Jerome said he felt that the physicians would be available when wanted, and asked that the recess over the holiday and until Monday be taken. Counsel for the defense consented.

Is Splendid Witness.

Mrs. Thaw apparently is in dead earnest, and atthough the strain under which she is laboring is plainly cyldent, there is not the slightest sign that she will not be able to bear up under it. The color comes and goes in her face as the examination proceeds, and occasionally she frowns or pouts; but she answers projectly and in most cases with apparent frankness.

Occasionally she hesitates and leans forward in herschair as if to be sure she understands, not only the words in which Mr. Jerome's question is framed, but his motive in asking it as well. Her childish face is continually changing as the district attorney's questions follow each other rapidly. Sometimes ter childish face is continually changing as the district attorney's questions ollow each other rapidly. Sometimes he expression denotes interest; occationally indignation; never defance, he seems to have a full realization of the importance of her position and the fact that to a great extent her usband's life is in her hands. When he rapid flow of questions reaches a ritical point, she fences with the district attorney in a manner worthy of much greater experience in such atters than her appearance and her cords indicate. She seems constantly ratching for pittels in Mr. Jerome's uestions, and Airefally avoids them.

Evelyn's Life in Paris.

While Mr. Jerome was questioning Mrs. Thaw to-day as to the manner of life she had led while in Parls, he read said was in her husband's writing. It scraps of a letter which Mrs. Thaw has a find swriting. It read:

"He couldn't keep his eyes off any pretty girl. There was trouble because we went there to dine. Several beautiful (7) girls were here 1.st week and Belle — Nobody paid any attention to her, and she went away in a few minutes. The first time she came to Evelyn she never spoke. Evelyn cried. For some reason she did not perform. I introduced the ladles to her, and they grinned sweetly. The night of the Grand Prix there was a swell time at the Cafe de Paris. Afterwards the dead rat. Mass Winchester was there and we got her cake-walking at 2 A. M. It was a great lift. Resemfeld and Belmont were there." Mrs. Thaw identified another letter written by her while she was in Paris. The letter was addressed to an unmarried actress, and read:

When the Thaw lawyers saw that Evelyn's presence as a witness at the trial would be necessary to make out a defense for her husband, the entire Thaw family united to keep her with them. As a last resort, it is said, the Thaws agreed to a $300,000 settlement, provided Evelyn would stay with them and tell her story in defense of Thaw.

GIRL CHAZED BY HEADING ABOUT THE THAW TRIAL

KITTANNING, PA., February 21.-KITTANNING, PA., February 21.— A serious effect of reading the Thaw trial proceedings was reported to the county authorities here to-day, when they were asked to join in a search for Miss Elizabeth Schwenning, aged seventeen, daughter of a farmer living near Wickboro, who according to her parent has lost her mind sympathizing with Mrs. Harry Kendall

Within two days after the publication of the sensational statement of the Thaw woman on the stand in New York, Miss Schwenning began to act queerly. She astounded her mother by announcing her name was Elizabeth Nesbit; that she had just discovered this and that she also came from Climax, Canada. Each day the young woman became worse until she would tell stories most weird to imaginary listeners. One of her hallucinations was that she had been forced to do washing ever since she was seven years of age. The family of the young girl at last hecame so alarmed that they hid the newspapers from the girl, but last night she disappeared.

Survivor's Story.

Captain Parkinson, of Belfast, Ireland, who appeared to be the sole survivor, was on his way to Amsterdam to Join his vessel, the Myrmidon, of the Holt Line, to bring her back to Liverpool.
The captain, describing the disaster, says the night was the most terribio of all his experience. Never had iseen such weather. So terrific was the gale that he remained all night completely dressed on deck. The Berlin aready was near the light at the north pler, and the passengers, many of when had not gone below, were beginning to breathe freely again after the terribe crossing, when the ship struck with a violent shock. Then suddenly the vessel broke in twain. Captain Parkinson hurried to the bridge to offer Captain Preclous his help, but just as he put his foot on the ladder he saw the captain and the pilot swent away by the sen.

On what followed Captain Parkinson cannot give a clear account. When he recovered himself he was in the water surrounded by idoating timbers. One of these he setzed and he succeeded in keeping himself affoat until he saw the fifeboats. His cry for help was heard and he was pleked up and brought ashere.
